

The Project Work of the Affiliates of the Indo-German Society e.V.

www.dig-bundesverband.de

The Indo-German Society e.V. and its affiliates support numerous projects in India. To the activities belong projects devoting the training and further education of children and young persons, the equal rights for women in families, society and education and the assisting and building centres of sanitary, welfare and rehabilitation. Further the society and its affiliates support programs devoting development of the villages and the regional structure. The leading thought of all these efforts is the principle of "helping people to help themselves". That means that the society and its affiliates try to use local potential for a self-defined and sustainable change in consideration of the social, cultural and political context of the projects. For effective development cooperation, it is important to keep an eye on motives for why people engage in projects: who really benefits from the help and at whose expense? The adequate methods must be submitted to a careful examination.

In consideration of size and complexity of the Indian subcontinent and the huge number of possibilities to engage with social projects, it's evident that the Indo-German Society e.V. and its affiliates can only engage selective and on a limited scale.

The teaching methods adopted by the school include not only the progressive "smart classes" system, which foresees the integration of "new media" in the classes, but also focus strongly on the creative, practical, social, moral and spiritual potential of the students.		On the recommendation of the Indo-German Society Remscheid students can complete a period of practical training and teachers can engage in further studies, e.g. in the special subject German , which was introduced after the first exchange with German teachers and most certainly makes a contribution to the promotion of intercultural competence.

The following projects have been established and are maintained by former pupils of the 'Roentgen Highschool Remscheid'. After graduation these pupils – influenced by the cooperation with the Indo-German Society Remscheid and its longstanding partner Dr. Lenin Raghuvanshi und PVCHR/ People Vigilance Committee on Human Rights in India – developed the independent projects Sukria and Plurismo. With their outstanding engagement they are a model of contemporary international youth work and are exemplary for the youth work of the Indo German Society and its affiliate Remscheid.

About the projects:

The awareness of Dalit's life in India has its anchor within the members of Plurismo and the co-founders of Sukria since school times. As part of a project week 2006 at the Roentgen Highschool with Helma Ritscher from the Remscheid branch of the DIG, we made pen pals to India as young people, who held until graduation in 2010. During this time, the group was aptly called "Together in Friendship for Dalit's Rights." At that time, India was a distant world for us, but it began to live through the dazzling and impressive stories and images of Helma. It was not the "dazzling Bollywood India" and therefore very exciting.

After graduation, the group dispersed but met again when donations were collected for the construction of Baghwanala School second floor. Finally, the project revived through a visit by Henrik Sadlowski in Varanasi. His first visit, despite stories and pictures, was a culture shock. The new impressions were translated into ideas and the non-profit organization Plurismo e.V., headed by Marius Kurtz and Jonas van Stappen, was founded. Its goal is the intercultural strengthening of social projects. Plurismo provides the contact and helps with planning a stay on site. Through this not only medical internships in India were organized, but also a solar system at the Baghwanala School was built.

At the same time, in Henrik Sadlowski and Marius Kurtz, the idea grew to help in a way that enables people to help themselves on the ground. As the center of hand-woven fabrics and clothing, Varanasi is predestined for the production of clothing. Fair pay, fair working conditions, a regulated structure with health precaution as well as transparency in the production of the fashion are the anchors of the company policy of the 2016 founded SUKRIA UG (limited liability).

They know everyone involved in the production personally. It starts with the weavers in Varanasi, goes over the dyers from Jaipur, who dye the fabrics on a natural basis, and goes on to the German, GOTS-certified button manufacturer. In a family sewing workshop in Delhi, the fabrics are processed into unisex shirts. The short- and long-sleeved variants were designed by designer Noa Elizabeth Goren, who lives in Tel Aviv.

"Teething problems" still have to be worked on before the shirts can come onto the market. At the end of 2018, the first collection of twelve models is to be crowdfunded.

The vision remains: an own sewing plant in Varanasi. Matching premises have already been found, equipped with sewing machines, tables and cabinets. Sukria should be more than just a job. It should be a place that people like to come to, where they can still be together after work, and where they can change their environment sustainably.
